

For three consecutive summers, I organized and participated in the "Beat the Heat Drive," distributing cold refreshments like sharbat and Glucon-D to workers and passersby enduring the intense heat.

To maximize our reach, I helped coordinate donations of cold drinks from neighbors, peers, and local businesses, transforming a neighborhood effort into a sustained community-wide initiative. Each summer, we focused on key areas—construction sites, bus stops, and crowded intersections—where workers, street vendors, and passersby had limited access to shade or water. By the end of our drive, we reached over 1,000 individuals each year, providing not only refreshments but also a sense of community support during difficult conditions. I also participated in the sharbat drive by Interact Club of Calcutta Visionaries.

Focusing on those working outdoors or without shelter, we provided small relief from the scorching weather. Over time, our drive reached over 1,000 people, making a meaningful impact in the community. This experience taught me the importance of empathy, teamwork, and the power of collective efforts to support those in need.
